Now here is a good thing recorded in the New York Times. Charles Wiedeman, a leading citizen of Newport, Ky., was recently awakened in the night by the noise made by a burglar trying to force his way into Mr. Wiedeman's house. Mr. Wiedeman arose, seized his pistol and looking out the window, observed a masked man at work trying to enter his house. The Cincinnati Post describes the ordeal as follows:

unity, or the innocents that suffer when a human life is taken by force.

Your country is swarming with hot-headed, hot-blooded, unthinking men who carry deadly weapons, and who threaten men for slight cause or no cause at all, and if they escape punishment or were in some measure justified, the blood of their victims is before them in their waking

The Negro man and his Negro wife lived in the cabin were captured together, burned at the stake the "unwritten law."

The procedure was entirely logical. If you could burn a black man at the stake for killing a white man, you could burn a black woman for killing a white man.

Why couldn't they? What are you thinking about?
